Adukwu–Bolujoko Heads New UPBS Board

By Obinna Nwodim

Vice-Chancellor, Professor Joseph Ajienka, has inaugurated the Governing Board of the University of Port Harcourt Business School (UPBS), with a charge to members to use their vast contacts and professional experience to position the School as a centre of academic excellence in business studies.

Performing the inauguration at the Governing Council Chambers, last Thursday, Professor Ajienka who expressed delight that the new Board comprised people with vast professional experience, said that the move was in line with the desire of his administration to tap from the vast experience of the industry to deliver quality service to stakeholders in the.

Represented by the Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Administration), Professor Ethelbert Nduk, the Vice-Chancellor, expressed hope that with the distinguished personalities on the Board, the School would achieve the purpose for which it was set up. He expressed hope that the new Board will formulate policies that would enable the School be in tune with current developments in global business education.

He stated that “the University is in its fourth epoch of development which focuses on increased interaction with industry players, who are the ultimate consumers of our end product. We are tapping into the experiences of the industry in order to add value chain to our service delivery to various clients,” he said, commending the Director, Professor Clifford Offurum, for Cont’d on p6
Overworking Is Bad For Us, Especially With Robots Waiting In The Wings

By Stefan Stern

"Buy two suit jackets," the bankers of SG Warburg used to be advised. If you wanted to get home at a reasonable time, without being spotted missing from your desk when co-founder Henry Grunfeld dropped by for a word, you left a jacket on the back of your chair. With any luck the boss would move on, believing he had just missed you and that you were still hard at work somewhere in the building.

This story sounds quaint today. With smartphone and laptop technology, you may be allowed to leave the office, but what about actually being at work? The beeps and flashing lights of gadgetry never seem to stop. Flexibility is one thing, perm work another.

This is a global phenomenon unaffected by the gaps between time zones. Now we hear that in Japan the government is considering making it a legal requirement for employees to take at least five days of paid holiday a year. Yes, five. At the moment, Japanese workers are apparently just refusing to take the holiday that is due to them. It will have to be imposed on them, as it were.

Overwork, with its cousin, low productivity, are a growing modern phenomenon. In Japan a combination of insecurity about your place in the organization, fear of falling behind and the pressure to match colleagues’ commitment, seem to be behind the culture of work addiction. Not that this has helped the Japanese economy very much over the past two decades, where growth has been modest to say the least.

Indeed, not only has Japan given us the concept of “karoshi” – death by overwork – but also the anthropological phenomenon of “madogiewazoku” – window-seat tribe – employees who remain at the company staring out of the window and not necessarily achieving very much.

Collectively, we are being pretty stupid about how we organize and allocate work. Talk of a UK “jobs miracle” is overdone and misleading. The workforce is bigger, the population has grown – but productivity is low (17 percentage points behind the other G7 economies in output per hour in 2013). Productivity remains much lower in the UK than in the US, France and Germany.

However, there is no neat, straight-line connection between the amount of paid holiday workers receive and their productivity. While French employees may enjoy as many as 25 days of paid leave, with a famously laid-back August in particular, and Germans get 20, US workers receive far fewer, with the picture varying state by state. What matters is the management of time and the skills and attitudes employees have.

Some British people are working for far too long, with damage being done to health and family life. Others do not have nearly enough work to do. Low pay rates force some into taking a second job; over a million people now do this (although not all of them – MPs, for example – because of poverty), while just under 2 million people remain out of work.

And now, if insecurity isn’t high enough already, we are told that the robots are coming to replace some of us altogether. But on this last point there was some comforting news recently, also from Japan, reported in the FT. Junji Tsuda, chairman and president of the Japanese robotics company Yaskawa Electric, explained that while robots were useful they did not match up to humans in many ways.

It is a challenge to build them, and growth in their use will be steady, not spectacular. “Human hands have incredible precision,” Tsuda said. “There are more than 10,000 sensors in here [the human hand]. To put more than 10,000 sensors in a piece of hardware... And we need more, not fewer clever humans to build them: “Growth is held back by the number of engineers who can do that,” he added.

We need to think. Perhaps not quite as radical a one as proposed a couple of years ago by the New Economics Foundation – a 21-hour working week – but a redistribution of work and a reassessment of priorities nonetheless.

Holiday is good for us, and makes us more productive when we return. If we are going to resist the advancing robots, humans have to maintain their edge, by doing imaginative things which create value and surpass what any robot could ever do. Death by overwork is not a wise option.

In Bhutan, conventional measures of Gross Domestic Product (GDP) were abandoned four decades ago, to be replaced by something called gross national happiness (GNH). Although still a poor country by western standards, Bhutan has other goals in mind. The pursuit of happiness has replaced the pursuit of accumulating ever more consumer goods.

Mind you, guess how many days paid holiday you get there? A rather Japanese-sounding five.

CIG Students Shine At National Exhibition

By Ethel Tim-Johnson

Following their participation and impressive performance, three students of the Centre for Petroleum Geosciences (CIG) in the Institute of Petroleum Studies, have won various prizes at the 50th Annual International Conference and Exhibition of the Nigerian Mining and Geosciences Society (NMGS) which held in Benin last year.

According to a letter signed by Acting Director of the Centre, Dr. Francis Bekah and made available to a Correspondent of UniPort Weekly through the office of the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Joseph Ajehoka, the Centre submitted ten out of the rigorously selected and shortlisted abstracts for presentation at the NMGS Conference. “The papers dwell on diverse aspects of Petroleum Geosciences, including Geosciences Modelling and Basinal Evaluation, Integrated Petrophysics and Petroleum Hydraulics, Reservoir Characterization and Management and Geomechanics,” the letter disclosed.

“CIG made an impressive representation and assertions were well impressed by the technical content, contribution to knowledge and presentation mode of the students. Mr. Olatunde Ige, Mr. Ugochukwu Uwalaka and Mr. Lawrence Akubue, would be conferred with their awards at the forthcoming SI Annual International Conference of the NMGS holding in Lagos from March 15 to 20, 2015,” the letter stated.

While attributing the successes recorded by the Centre to the quality of teaching and research orientation impacted on the students by a team of international and local resource persons and mentors in the academia and industry, Dr. Bekah commended the Vice-Chancellor and the MacArthur Foundation of Chicago for supporting the activities of the Centre.

I Will Take Animal Science Dept To Greater Heights ~ Akinola

By Humphrey Ogu

N ewly-appointed Acting Head of the Department of Animal Science in the Faculty of Agriculture, Dr. Luteron Akinola, has promised to use her position as Secretary, Membership Committee of the Nigerian Institute of Animal Science (NIAS) to enhance the Department's capacity to train professionals.

Exchanging views with a UniPort Weekly Correspondent, last Wednesday, Akinola, who was the South-South Co-ordinator of NIAS, disclosed plans to focus on professionalizing and making Animal Science a more attractive discipline to prospective students and other stakeholders in the affairs of the Department.

She promised that on her watch, the Department would strive to produce graduates who would make the University proud as professional animal scientists, citing an instance in which a graduate of the Department emerged among the best two in a NIAS professional examination in the past.

Akinola, who is also Chairman of the Intra-Faculty Bi-Enterprise and Agribusiness Committee, promised to bring her wealth of experience in the profession to bear on her tenure as Acting HoD. "We work hard to encourage our students to distinguish themselves in agribusiness and entrepreneurship to boost livestock production and job creation. We are preparing our students to win the Third Students' Entrepreneurship Competition of the Faculty of Agriculture. The Department won the first edition, but was beaten to second place at the second one," she disclosed, promising to rectify the anomaly at the coming competition.

Cognizant of the enormous challenges associated with running such a practice-oriented Department, the Acting HoD appealed for support from the University administration and other stakeholders to enable her achieve the purpose for which it was established. "With the necessary support from Management and other stakeholders, we hope to meet our mandate and also break new grounds by repositioning the Department in the training of professional animal scientists," she assured stakeholders.

Akinola, who noted that leadership entailed harnessing all available human and material resources to achieve organizational goals, promised to build on the achievements of her predecessors to take the Department to greater heights. "My tenure will be anchored on an open and inclusive leadership style that will mobilize all available resources to advance the cause of the Department. We shall seek mutually beneficial partnerships and funding sources that would boost teaching research," Dr. Akinola revealed.

"Before NIAS was set up by Act No. 26 in 2007, only Veterinarians were recognised in livestock production; but today, NIAS is in place to regulate the production and practice of animal science," she explained, calling for cooperation from staff and students of the Department to meet her mandate.

DV-C Heads C’ttee On UniPort Web Ranking

Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Academic), Professor Igbo Joe, has been appointed Chairman of a new Committee charged with the responsibility to improve the University of Port Harcourt Website Ranking.

A letter to that effect signed by the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Joseph Ajaejaka, and made available to UniPort Weekly, stated that Acting Director of the Academic Planning Unit, Dr. Peter Kpolorie, would serve as Co-ordinator of the project. The Vice-Chancellor expressed gratitude to members of the Committee for accepting to serve the University on such a strategic assignment.

Other members of the Committee include: Director of Information and Communication Technology Centre, Professor Anthony D. Ibe, Deputy Registrar (Information) Williams Wodi, SAVC, Kingsley Wogwu, Deputy Registrar (Vice-Chancellor's Office), Kevlyn Makoe, Deputy Registrar (Establishment), Steven Eko, and Exams and Records Officer, Mr. LI Jonathan.

The Terms of Reference (ToR) of the Committee, according to the letter of appointment, are to ensure that: All publications are uploaded on the Web, all events are video-documented and uploaded, accreditation documents are uploaded, list of all staff with their profiles, as well as links to all Institutes/Centre websites are also available online to enhance the digital visibility of the University of Port Harcourt.
V-C, Others Charge CELTRAS Students At Orientation

By Mercy Adeniji

Students admitted into the Centre for Logistics and Transport Studies (CELTRAS) for the 2014/2015 academic session have been advised to be disciplined, hard-working, focused and abide by the rules and regulations governing their admission into the University. Vice-Chancellor, Professor Joseph Ajaekwa, gave the advice while addressing the students during an orientation exercise held at the International Students’ Centre, University Park on Monday, February 20, 2015.

Professor Ajaekwa, who was represented by the Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Administration), Professor Ethelbur Ndaka, congratulated the students for gaining admission into the University, “We welcome you as student members and to this very important occasion aimed at introducing you to the University’s guidelines that would be of immense benefit to you as you commence your studies here,” he told the new students, advising them to be diligent in their studies. An Orientation exercise is not something you think you have outgrown at any point in time; even at your doctoral level, you still need Orientation to familiarize yourselves with the rules,” he said, noting that “the Orientation you may have received at the undergraduate level is quite different from what you would receive as a graduate, so it is very important you participate because in the long run, it would be of importance to you.”

In his contribution, Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Academic), Professor Igbo Joe, who spoke on "Academic Policy of the University and its relationship to your Studies", charged the students to embrace hard work, attend lectures, do their assignments, shun all forms of examination malpractice and avoid whatever would jeopardize their stay in the University. Also speaking, the Registrar, Mrs. Matilda Nnodi, who was represented by the Director of Academic Affairs, Mrs. Dorcas Otto, spoke on "University Administration", charging the students to always imbibe the virtues of hard work, honesty, commitment to their studies and ensure they complete their programme at the stipulated timeframe, describing administration as an act of managing people or the activities in order to plan, organize and run a business or an institution.

Director of the Centre, Professor Oyi Akpogomhe, recalled that the Centre was established in January, 2012 with a mandate to provide adequate knowledge and practical skills for understanding and solving logistics and transportation problems in Nigeria, as well as mobilize funding to support conferences, seminars, workshops and publications. “The Centre desires to redress the general absence of proper planning, coordination and efficient management of logistics and activities in both the public and private sectors of the economy by preparing and training qualified logistics and transport professionals to manage that sector of the national economy,” he said.

Professor Akpogomhe further highlighted the academic programmes of the Centre, its major landmark achievements and future direction, stressing that, “it is pertinent to note that the first set of PGD Students admitted into the 2012/2013 session has graduated and many of them are in the current M.Sc programme.”

Talks were also given on: Brief History of the School of Graduate Studies, by Provost of the College of Graduate Studies, Professor Roseline Konya, The Use of the Library by the University Librarian, Dr. Obiageli Nwodo, who was represented by Dr. Susan Umovwe, and The Student and Security, by the Chief Security Officer Lieutenant Col. Regina Iguzo (rtd).

Speaking on behalf of the Master’s Class, Course Leader, Mr. Thompson Onwuachekwa, expressed gratitude to Management of the University for providing the students an enabling environment to study, promising that they would abide by the rules and regulations governing the terms of their admission.

Macdonald Students Visit UniPort Library

By Ethel Timi-Johnson

A way of encouraging good reading and learning habits, students of Macdonald International Institute paid a facility visit to the Donald Fawcett Library to ascertain how the complex is organized. The Secretary of Extracurricular Activities Committee, Mirrian Okahwere and Librarian, Alice Omoal, led the students members of the Library Book Club of the School located at Igwuruta on the facility tour of the University of Port Harcourt, last Friday.

Disclaiming the purpose of the visit to the University, Okahwere and Omoal noted that the trip was necessitated by the recent inauguration of a Book Club in the school for students in the Senior Secondary classes, who may aspire to be writers in future. “The University Library would also provide an opportunity for them to appreciate the importance of reading and preserving books,” the duo told our Correspondent. Receiving the visibly elated students, Deputy Registrar in charge of the Vice-Chancellor’s office, Mr. Kelsey Makale, advised them on the need to be committed to their studies so as to end up as professionals in future. “Studying well today will ensure that you get admitted to the University of Port Harcourt and other top institutions to study the courses of your dreams.” We have various Faculties and Departments that train people to become Doctors, Engineers, Pharmacists, Managers and Journalists among other notable professions,” he told the students, advising them to study very hard to achieve their objectives in life.

Makale, who recounted the giant strides recorded in the University so far, also explained the various responsibilities of the administrative and teaching arms of the University to the students. “We also have Centres and Institutes which provide specialized training to those who apply to read there or engage in research work,” he explained to the students. Responding, President of the Book Club, Prince Jack, Library Prefect, Golden Iruanyenoma and Secretary of the Club, Immanuella Dabobra, commended the University Management for affording the students an opportunity to tour the Library. “This visit would boost our reading culture and study habits,” the trio said, lauding the University for its clean and green environment, including impressive facilities.

NAOC Tertiary Scholarship Scheme

The Nigerian Agip Oil Company Limited (NAOC) has called for applications for its 2014/15 Tertiary Scholarship Scheme. An e-mail received by the Vice-Chancellor and made available to UniPort Weekly said that the application opened on Monday, February 9 and would close on Monday, March 9, 2015. The e-mail, which stated that the scholarships are in two categories said: “Host Communities Merit Award is strictly for applicants from NAOC Host Communities in any course of study, while National Merit Award is for applicants from Non-Host Communities studying Engineering, Geology and Geosciences only.”

“Qualification for consideration, applicants must be registered full-time Undergraduates in a recognised Nigerian Tertiary Institution, a certified 100-level student at the time of application and must have gained admission during the 2014/2015 academic session,” the mail said.

As the University steps up the process of appointing its 8th Vice-Chancellor, Senate met last Wednesday at an emergency session to elect its representatives into the Selection Board and Search Teams for the purpose.

After a lengthy considered election that followed due process, Professors Chukwudi Onyeaso of the Faculty of Dentistry and Alice Nw of the Department of Paediatrics and Child Health, both of the College of Health Sciences, polled 170 and 95 votes, respectively, to beat three (3) other contestants into the Selection Board for a new Vice-Chancellor.

Professors Gordian Obute and Femi Shaka, were unanimously returned unopposed into the Search Team. The elections set the stage for the input of Senate into the process of selecting a new Vice-Chancellor for the University to replace the incumbent, Professor Joseph Ajienka, whose five-year tenure ended in early July, this year.

Senate also deferred deliberation on the Report of the Implementation Committee on the Collegiate System and College/Faculty Boards position for its next meeting in March.

The meeting which was chaired on behalf of the Vice-Chancellor by Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Administration), Professor Ethelbert Nduka, also considered results from the Faculty of Humanities, Faculty of Social Sciences, College of Natural and Applied Sciences, Faculty of Management Sciences, College of Engineering, Faculty of Agriculture, Faculty of Pharmaceutical Sciences, Colleges of Health Sciences and College of Graduate Studies.

Recommendations for External Examiners were approved for the Departments of Linguistics and Communication Studies, Theatre and Film Studies, Animal Sciences, Fisheries, Pharmaceutical Technology, Pharmaceutical Microbiology and Biotechnology.

Requests for temporary withdrawal from studies and application to write examinations as first attempts, were also approved as they were presented from the College of Natural and Applied Sciences, Faculty of Social Sciences, as well as Management Sciences.

Before calling for the motion for adjournment of the meeting, Professor Nduka frowned at a situation in which most members of Senate only turned up only during elections, calling for a change in attitude as attendance at Senate meetings was a statutory responsibility of senior academics, especially Professors.

A Minute's Silence was also observed in honour of late Professor Doris Iheoma Uchendu of the Department of Medicine, who died on January 26, 2015. Also in attendance at the Meeting were the 5th Vice-Chancellor, Emeritus Professor Nimi Briggs and Emeritus Professor Samuel Okwu.

In a related development, Professor Tammy Orunobako of the Faculty of Education and Mr. Eric Abonehi, Head, Legal Unit have also been elected to represent Congregation on the “Search Team” for the appointment of a new Vice-Chancellor of the University of Port Harcourt. They were unanimously elected at the 58th Meeting of Congregation held last Thursday at the Ebitimi Banigo Auditorium.

Bursar Bemoans Economic Meltdown At Thanksgiving Service

By Otigor Samuel

With the global economic meltdown pervading every sector of the Nigerian economy, the Bursar, Mr. Vitalis Aliezi, has called for appropriate measures that would minimize the adverse effects of dwindling statutory allocations on the University. He predicted more challenges in funding the activities of the University if drastic measures were not applied to tackle the situation at all levels.

Mr. Aliezi, who made the observation at the maiden Annual Thanksgiving Service of the Bursary Department held at Chapel of The Annunciation on Sunday, February 15, 2015, stressed the need for alternative funding sources to meet the ever-increasing demand of universities for revenue to fund their activities.

Elaborating on the reason for the annual End-of-Year Party and Thanksgiving Service, Mr. Aliezi said it was the Department’s little way of showing appreciation to staff for their unwavering commitment to duty, while also dedicating a new service year to God’s guidance.

“The Bursary Department does not only service the Governing Council, the University Management, Staff and Students; we also service project contractors, as well as local suppliers, amongst others. These functions make the Bursary Department the most frequently visited place in the University, with all the attendant pressures such a situation exerts on our activities. Different supervising agencies from the Federal Capital Territory, Abuja, such as the Office of the Auditor-General, Federal Ministry of Education, National Universities Commission (NUC), amongst others, visit the Department on almost weekly basis to ascertain our financial status or seek information. That means that what we do as a strategic Department comes under intense scrutiny on daily basis from diverse regulatory agencies and stakeholders,” the Bursar said, calling for understanding from staff and students of the University while appropriate measures were being devised to contain the situation.

Continuing he said: “If salaries are not paid on time arising from circumstances outside our control, we lose sleep; not only because of agitations from the Staff Unions, but because we realize that families will be adversely affected in terms of their capacity to provide for their daily bread, as well as in the prompt settlement of the statutory obligations of the University.”

It would be recalled that the Bursar had announced the date for the Thanksgiving Service at an End-of-Year Party held for serving and retired staff of the Department at the Ebitimi Banigo Auditorium. The event also offered him an opportunity to reward retired Chief Accountants of the Department, including Mr. Eugene Owonda, Mrs. Ethun Bare and Special Assistant to the Bursar (SAB), Mr. Morgan Achi for their excellent services. Also honoured were the 4th and 5th Bursars, Sir Michael Eke and Mr. Mark Roman, including Mrs. Juliet Achi of the Treasury Unit, who was feted for her dedication to duty.
his determination to develop the Port Harcourt Business School into a first choice destination for business studies.
In her acceptance speech, Chairman of the Board, Dr. Sally Adukwu-Bolujoko, thanked authorities of the University for finding members worthy to serve in such an important capacity, promising that they would bring their industry experience and contacts to enhance the quality of UPBS in the shortest possible timeframe.
Adukwu-Bolujoko, who noted that “the School under the guidance of has a vision to produce leaders and managers that can take up responsibilities in the world of work and business,” assured that “we are going to do our best to bring our professionalism to bear on our new assignment.”
She said that an emerging economy such as Nigeria needed a robust Business School to accelerate economic development, assuring the authorities that they will help the University raise the profile of the School.
Earlier in his address, Director of the School, Professor Offurum, said that the composition of the Board was to strengthen its activities and widen the capacity of the PHBS to better serve its increasing clientele, adding that the School which commenced with 25 students in 2011 now has over 250 students.
Other members of the Board are: Chief Osinaakahukwu Ideozu, Mr. Tari Ekpebe, Engineer Pedro Egbe, Dr. Eme Membre-Otuji, Dr. Monday Akpan, Mr. Grant Orugbani, Professor Ben Willie Abbey, and Professor Steve Okoduwa, as well as Professor Offurum.

Celebrating 40 Years Of Excellence In CNAS

By Obinna Nwodim
The College of Natural and Applied Sciences commenced academic activities with the School system under the guidance of distinguished scholars, who converged on the University from many parts of the world. The system started with the School of Physical Sciences, School of Biological Sciences and School of Chemical Sciences. Following agitation for the establishment of the position of Head of Department, which had no room in the operational structure of the then School system. The three schools were later collapsed into a new Faculty of Science to create room for a three-tier system—Department, Faculty and Vice-Chancellor.
The new Faculty recorded many landmark achievements in terms of research breakthroughs and introduction of new courses. Not too long ago, the Faculty tabled a request on the floor of Senate to be transformed into a College status; and so was born the College of Natural and Applied Sciences with three restructured Faculties, namely: Biological, Chemical, Physical and Information Sciences.

Emeritus Prof Okiwelu

Prof Nnenna Frank-Peterside, Provost CNAS

After 40 years of research and robust academic engagement, the College of Natural and Applied Sciences could boast its chest in self-fulfilment of having made an impressive impact in advancement of science and innovation. From all indications, it is evident that the aims and objectives for which it was established are being incrementally realized through the efforts of a dedicated crop of scholars and seasoned administrators. There is no doubt that the College has been able to sustain capacity in the sciences by providing the requisite manpower to advance the frontiers of knowledge in this area of specialization. It has, so far, achieved research breakthroughs by erudite scientists in the hallowed corridors of the College.

Such trademark names as Francis Onaefohara, Bruce Povel, Gabriel Ekeke, Samuel Okiwelu, Emmanual Anosike, Alphonsus Ansumm, amongst others, rang bell in the world of science and university scholarship. They made the sciences thick in the University of Port Harcourt and Nigeria. These accomplished scholars have in turn produced academics who are following in the excellent tradition established by the giants of the College.
Currently, the College boasts of the highest number of professors in the University, which is a no mean feat considering the tenuous processes involved in joining the professoriate. A major contribution to humanity from this College which will be remembered for a long time to come is the invention of CIKLAVIT—a dietary supplement for the management of sickle cell disorders by late Professor Gabriel Ekeke of the Department of Biochemistry. There was global acclaim when the World Health Organization (WHO) endorsed this wonder drug which is today manufactured by Pharmaceutical giant, Neimeth. The drug is marketed in Nigeria and some West African countries with remarkable improvements among patients.
The discovery of CIKLAVIT by a team of dedicated researchers led by late Professor Ekeke is a major boost to the image of the College and University of Port Harcourt. That is what research and development is all about—finding solutions to human problems. There are also significant research findings by other researchers in the College, particularly in Plant Science and Biotechnology, Industrial Chemistry and Microbiology.

With the establishment of the Emmanuel Paulker Professorial Chair in Sickle Cell Anaemia aimed at resuscitating the ground-breaking research work of Ekeke, there is hope that the next 40 years will witness more groundbreaking research that would bring global recognition to Unique UniPort. The Chair which is currently occupied by one of Professor Ekeke’s protégés, Professor Augustine Uwakwe, who is now working with a team to find lasting solution to the genetic abnormality that still has no known cure.
It is heartening that a new building for the Department of Animal and Environmental Biology is almost ready for occupation, while the Central Instruments Laboratory has attained about 80 per cent completion rate; so also the Animal House meant for experimentation of specimens.

After 40 years of robust engagement in teaching, research and community service, the College has been able to produce distinguished alumni, including the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, Dr. Goodluck Ebele Jonathan, who incidentally is 100 per cent made in the University of Port Harcourt. It is no mean feat to produce the Number One Citizen of the most populous Black Country in the world. It is great kudos to the College for achieving this rare feat that has brought immense goodwill to the University.
This is, indeed, a feat worth celebrating.
Artsville Gets Rave Reviews At Senate Performance

By Humphrey Ogu

Following intrepid interpretation of a play entitled: Exodus by the Institute of Arts and Culture at the University Arts Theatre—The CRAII, last Wednesday, the cast and crew have received rave reviews for their dramatic expertise. Exchanging views with UniPort Weekly after the performance, Professor Omolara Ogunbiyi, commended the cast and crew for the production of the play and the use of space in such a way that there was no congestion on the stage during the performance.

“The acting was also very good—the expression of anger, and of course, the familiar patriarchical struggles between three men in a family. The drumming was beautiful, including the singing and the poetry that was used in punctuating the sequence of action. It would be good to have a programme note for translation of the basic ideas of the songs for non-Yoruba speakers. In Italian opera, for instance, they provide translations for the audience to know what is being said and the emotions expressed,” she observed.

On his part, Acting Head of the Department of Fine Arts and Design, Professor Boufanwe Nwogu, also expressed satisfaction with the performance. “It is amazing and gratifying to observe that the students are able to produce a play within time constraint and panicity of stage facilities. It is classic and wonderful. It shows that Nigeria really has talented youths. This University has continued to be a leading institution in training artists with immense creativity—be it in the performing, or fine arts and design,” he noted, stressing the importance of sustaining the tempo. Also speaking, Director of the Intellectual Property and Technology Transfer Office (IPTTO), Professor Samuel Ikiodje, observed that “there was so much commitment on the part of actors and actresses in their bid to achieve excellence in the performance. If Ofa Rotimi were to resurrect and watch the play, there is no doubt that he would have been happy that his labour had not been in vain. What we saw this night was the materialization of his dream and the fruit of his labour.”

Director of the Institute of Arts and Culture and Executive Producer/Director of the play, Professor Julie Okoh, expressed gratitude to members of Senate, who turned up to watch the performance, promising that the Artsville will continue to thrill the University community with quality stage performances.

Originally written by Omara Omara, the play, Exodus, which was adapted and directed by Artistic Director of the Institute, Dan Kpodoh, was previously staged at the February edition of the Harcourt-UNESCO World Book Capital 2014 Book-of-the-Month performance at the Atlantic Hotel, Hall Presidential, Port Harcourt, on Sunday, February 22, 2015 to the delight of the audience.
